Subject: Microsoft Settlement

To whomever it may concern,

I am aware of the settlement agreement for Microsoft and agree that the settlement is fair for all parties involved. To assume that all end users are so uneducated that can not make an educated decision for themselves is disturbing in the first place. Even a teenager knows that if he purchases a car and does not like the speaker system that comes preinstalled on the vehicle that they can purchase a new speaker system from a variety of vendors. But then perhaps the older you get the less aware you are...

This settlement has more than enough covenants in it. Let's not go overboard on the restrictions.

We live in an age where the computer industry is a thriving industry. More people than ever are using computers on a daily basis. People know that Netscape is out there. I have IE and Netscape on my PC and use them interchangeably. So, where have my choices been limited? Nowhere! This topic really makes me mad.

Microsoft is a good company. I do not understand why people feel like they should go after a company that is turning around and contributing so much to our society. Mr. Gates distributes his wealth to a multitude of charities. People like that are very hard to find. Thank God for someone who is doing something to help people that truly need it in our troubled society.

Sincerely,

Erika Neumann
